

Premier Puts Irrigation Up to Prov. Govt.

Says Federal Government Could Not Do More Than It Has Done - Answers Charges Made Against Federal Government by Opposition Speakers - Gives Position on Tariffs.

Premier Meighen and Hon. James A. Calder spent a busy time in Medicine Hat yesterday. From early morning till after the public meeting in the evening they received several delegations, attended functions, chatted with old friends and made many new ones.

At noon they were tendered a banquet at which both gave short addresses. In the afternoon the ladies of the district held a reception in honor of Mrs. Meighen. At this the premier was also present and addressed the gathering. On all occasions quite a number from Redcliff and surrounding country were present.

After the noon banquet the premier dealt with the irrigation problem of this district. In his remarks he made it plain that this matter was no more to him than a question of the federal government in respect to the actual construction and operation of irrigation systems than was hydro-electric a federal matter. He said that after the federal government had spent something more than a million and a half dollars on elaborate surveys of the irrigation project the responsibility for constructing and administering the works rested with the local districts and the provincial government on any arrangements they desired to make.

Mr. Calder spoke of the immigration prospects for Canada and predicted that the near future would see a large influx of settlers to this country from both the United States and the east.

At the evening meeting the Fifth Avenue Methodist church was crowded to capacity. On this occasion the premier was in excellent form and dealt in an outspoken and convincing manner with the charges made against the government by opposition speakers. In discussing the tariff he said: "We framed our tariff on the protective principle and I don't see how we can abandon it, and I don't believe there were so few people who would dream of plunging this country into a free trade policy, but I don't think I have done what I have been described as a high tariff man. I challenge the newspapers which have so charged me to accept the challenge. I have for the past 12 years to produce one single instance to justify that constant allegation."

Referring to the leader of the opposition he said: "In the west Mr. Mackenzie King wants the farmers to vote for the Farmer platform, which describes as Liberalism. In Ontario he wants the people to vote for the Liberals because the Liberal platform does not say anything about protection. When he gets past an election he thinks he is able safely to tell them both. Consequently we will see that he will try to run a double platform stunt."

Mr. Calder, who was suffering from a severe cold, did not speak at length, but representing the Liberal side of the Union government, he heartily endorsed all the charges made and is doing to abolish party politics and other evils hitherto associated with party government.

Spracklin and five of his assistants had been driven that way into the Standard Hotel. The shooting occurred on a hallway on the first floor. According to members of the raiding party Trumble leveled a revolver at Spracklin and the latter fired in self defense.

The sudden disappearance from town last Friday evening of James Hinchinbush and the fact that he has not been heard from since, has been the cause of much comment, and as is usually the case under such circumstances, has been the cause of much comment. There appears to be no doubt Mr. Hinchinbush has left for some unknown. The unfortunate part of it is that he has left behind him a wife and two children. His wife, whose maiden name was Maria Hinchinbush, was married to Hinchinbush in the Parish church at Folkestone, Kent, on December 10th, 1911, and the marriage certificate was exhibited at this office.

TO PROTECT ANTELOPE IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES

With a view to investigating the advisability of enclosing and protecting the antelope running wild in the Brooks and Lake Muir districts, Dominion Game Warden H. E. Hibbard, in company with other officials, spent the past week going over the ground and counting the number of animals in the different herds in that area.

Mr. Hibbard said that it was very likely that the government, in consequence of the data obtained, would make the necessary arrangements for the protection of the antelope.

EUROPE'S TRIANGLE OF SUFFERING

At the earnest request of the Canadian Red Cross, Mr. Herbert Hoover, director-general of relief for Europe on behalf of the Allied Nations, came to Canada to launch the appeal on behalf of the British Empire War Relief Fund. This fund is being raised throughout the British Empire to combat the Canadian Red Cross through all that disease and distasteful in Europe. In previous divisions, will make the appeal in Armistice week.

Mr. Hoover, who is recognized as the chief authority in the world upon European conditions, spoke with the quiet conviction of one whose message was sufficient in itself. In commencing his speech he said that the greatest problem he saw in his presence in Canada might be misinterpreted as urging the Canadian people to further sacrifice.

He said he realized that the sacrifice of the Canadian people, individually by individual, had been far in excess of that of his own people, but he said he knew that the charity of the Canadian heart was inexhaustible, and he felt there would be no resentment against his coming to this country to help the problem that confronts the western hemisphere towards the east.

"To me," Mr. Hoover said, "the greatest problem of the human race in the world today is this problem of a myriad of walls and orphan hungry children during Eastern and Central Europe. The slaughter of fifteen million men could not but have left millions of helpless hungry children in its wake."

U. F. A. Drive Proved Very Successful

In the four days' campaign that the U. F. A. conducted for increased membership, the total sum received in subscription is $11,415. It is considered eminently satisfactory by the officials of the organization. The largest amounts received were from the following individuals: Messrs. J. J. Munn, of Stouffville; Mrs. Mary Pankley, of Stouffville; who sent $415 and $500 respectively.

H. Hinchinbush, the general secretary, stated Saturday morning that some of the canvassers in the south country had been so good that they had now completed their work. Reports were also beginning to be received from the north country now where the work was delayed owing to the weather. According to an estimate made, it is expected that each township in the province will be able to contribute between $100 and $200.

Explosion in Medicine Hat Causes Fatality

Another gas fatality was recorded in Medicine Hat when Mrs. M. Munn, wife of an employee of the Hefley Shale mill, died in the hospital last Friday from the effects of a bad gas fiasco through a gas explosion about 11:15 a. m. She had gone to the cellar to get some potatoes for dinner, taking a lighted candle with her. Mr. Munn heard an explosion and rushing to the scene, found Mrs. Munn struggling out of the cellar with all clothes except corset and boots practically burned off her body. She was rushed to the hospital. The fire brigade was called out but had little effect.

It is claimed that the cause of the explosion was not a leaky gas pipe, but that the gas was a sewerage gas from the basement floor. The residence located near the armory and this district had been the scene of other gas trouble heretofore.

Irrigation Projects Are Now Progressing

Organization and other primary arrangements have been so far carried out in connection with the Lethbridge Northern irrigation scheme that the debutante of the project, amounting to approximately $4,000,000, will be placed on the market within a short time, according to Hon. C. C. Mitchell, provincial treasurer for Alberta.

Mr. J. C. Charlton, who has been supervising preliminary arrangements on the part of the government during the last few months, says the trustees of the Lethbridge Northern are ready to offer the bonds for sale since all other details of the charter granted at the last session of the provincial legislature have been carried out satisfactorily with the majority approval of the members involved. These bonds carry a guarantee from the provincial government amounting to two full years' interest, which will total over $700,000, it is expected that the issue will find purchasers without the great difficulty which was encountered in some sections of the south west in the disposal of the bonds.

The next irrigation project to come before the legislature will probably be the South Mayfield district. According to George Stedding, M. L. A. for Macleod, about 100,000 acres will be involved in this project, and the situation east of the scheme will be far less than the Lethbridge Northern. The Macleod lands will be about 100,000 acres and will be about 200 feet lower than the Lethbridge Northern. A short session of the town council was held at the regular meeting last Wednesday evening. Mayor Bott occupied the chair and the following councillors were present: Messrs. Holmes, Broughton, Learmonth and Stone.

The monthly report from the water department showed that the monthly water was consumed by the industries last month than the previous month, but there was a very noticeable falling off in consumption for domestic use. This was due to the fact that no water was being used for general purposes.

The Last Day of Their Summer

Summer's on the wane, time for all wandering lovers to get back to work. You know how it is after you've met the only girl somewhere where you can make a dash for it, and you're both so happy and in love that you don't want to let the day slip away. You're both so happy and in love that you don't want to let the day slip away. You're both so happy and in love that you don't want to let the day slip away.

And keep dreaming of HER as she sits there with you, and you steal a glance at the eyes staring toward the sea and ask yourself if it's fair. The only answer you get is a shrilly squeak from a gull who drifts past, and then you're both so happy and in love that you don't want to let the day slip away. You're both so happy and in love that you don't want to let the day slip away. You're both so happy and in love that you don't want to let the day slip away.

And especially the things we want to last the longest and—but then, how long we'd like it if we had the power of prolonging some of our very happiest Summer recollections—perhaps it would cease to be happy and then with the possibility of men we'd be looking for some way to shorten it. There's a lot to be said for the methods of things as they are—even if they do involve that last day of the Summer together—don't you think so?

APPEAL FOR EUROPEAN CHILDREN.

In another column of this issue will be found an article which gives a report of a speech made by Herbert Hoover at Toronto, in which he makes a strong appeal to the citizens of Canada for assistance to help feed and care for the unfortunate children of Eastern and Central Europe. A perusal of this article cannot help but impress one of the seriousness of the situation over there and at the same time remind us of the solemn duty devolving on those living in countries, the geographical position of which has saved them from devastations and sufferings of the Great War.

The Red Cross, which is now organized for peace time work, has undertaken the responsibility of collecting funds for this purpose. Unfortunately no arrangements have been made for a canvass today but Rev. Dr. Shearer, and Rev. C. F. Orman will receive donations from any who may feel disposed to give to this worthy cause, and they will see that any such contributions are forwarded to the headquarters. This is a matter which should be given more than a passing thought.

THE PROHIBITION VOTE.

As the returns from the recent prohibition vote become more complete the dry majority continues to grow. In Saskatchewan the majority is now considerably over 26,000, while in Alberta it is now hovering around the 16,000 mark with a few polls still to hear from. There are those who argue that the majorities are not overwhelming enough to warrant the government of this province making any drastic changes over the law as it existed when inter-provincial trade was prohibited during part of the war. In dealing with this phase of the question the Calgary Albertan says:

"The Liberal party was returned to power in the last provincial election by a fairly substantial majority. But the vote was only 54,908, compared to 42,683 by the Conservatives, 9,813 by the Independents and 13,000 or thereabouts by the soldiers. Still it was a fairly substantial majority and some called it an overwhelming majority."

Still Shipping Booze To United States

A special dispatch from Port Francis, Ont., says:

"Booze has been flowing across the Rainy river; here and at other points with as much if not more freedom than at Windsor and along the Detroit river. The whisky ring is having pretty much its own way in this district. If the provincial authorities are making any efforts to break up or check the traffic, their efforts are not particularly noticeable. Estimates by citizens and private detectives place the value of liquor shipped or carried across the river into Minnesota from the province of Ontario during the past summer at between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000."

"All along the 75 miles where the Rainy river forms the boundary line bootleggers have carried on with practically no interference. Farmers on the river front have been getting in huge shipments. Vessels ferried unoccupied for years, have been rented and their occupants have become suddenly prosperous."

A Fish Story From Vancouver Island

View of Sprat Lake, Vancouver Island.

"Truth," said one of the rascals, "lives at the bottom of a well." She is also to be encountered in the great inland spaces. I met her on the prairie shores of Sprat Lake, in the heart of Vancouver Island.

She sprang unannounced from the top of a handsome dais of healthy appetites and vigorous mind.

Think of the opportunities and industries there are in this little beauty-spot of three hundred miles by eighty, all sea-fish and serene timberline, pulp-making, gun-making, fishing, canning, poultry keeping, no-raising, farming, fruit-growing, driving, manufacturing. There is a man here who makes cement and at the same time cultivates one of the loveliest gardens on the American Continent, and another who grows flower seeds—nothing but flower seeds—for the highest seed market in the world. As for play, it is manifold and unending.

Sprat Lake is in the heart of the island, reachable at present, through some of the most romantic timbered country God ever made, only by auto, though the steel rail from Port Albera is pushing shore.

A bunkhouse in morning and evening, fourteen rods, revolver, pick knife and cartridges slung about her waist and her rifle hard by. This lady, who has a cultured mind as well as a stout heart and a brawny arm, shoots cougar, before breakfast, pots bear in the forenoon, hunts deer before tea, and before sundown trans-hunts and rodents—all in their season, of course, and when there are no guests around.

Just now she receives you in her house-boat, on the southern shore.

In a few moments you and your baggage speed over the still waters to a distant chalet, nestling among the hemlock and Jack pines, and encircled by tents.

Have you ever bathed in the sweet waters drawn direct from surrounding hills? Under the moon and the stars, when the velvety surface is perfect and unbroken except by the pop of a jumping trout? In the early dawn, when the sun puts his lips to the brim of his breakfast bowl, and sucks up his ration of cream mist? In the late afternoon, when the heat makes every thirty pore drink its fill as you plunge into the emerald depths? Have you sat by the camp fire at night and, drowsing, watched the sparks fly upward? No? Then you have never lived.

One day we had a fish adventure. In sudden, Sprat Lake is like the impetus of a giant paw. The middle digit, Taylor Arm, runs up fourteen miles to the mouth of the Taylor River. We packed a lunch-basket, and, leaving the women at home, set out early to fish this lonely inlet. We had a gay trawler. Our wires came down to the beach to see we had everything aboard. Their faith in their husband's skill with the rod was touching—and they were providing fish for next day's breakfast. Amid smiles and benedictions we were off.

Our tackle was wondrous—we tackled of amateur ways. We soaked the wad in the chilly waters of Taylor River. We rolled with worms and spinners, for fourteen miles. We cast on this side and we cast on that. We cursed, we prayed. But between the white bunch of us we had never a strike.

As the sun dropped the chalet hove in sight. On the beach awaiting us were two figures in white. We looked into each other's eyes and frowned.

"Hullo! Hullo!"

The cry came from a tiny cove. Three fishermen, awarthy as Indian braves, beckoned us. They had the most primitive tackle, a tangle of tin cans and clothes lines. But in the bottom of their shaft lay a gleaming pile.

"We are camping out," they cried, "and our catch will go had on our hands. Would you care for a few?" There was no answer but a gulp. Four pairs of eager hands went out and soon five three-pounders and some smaller fry were swung in our basket.

"Our luck is good, but they'll be useful up at the chalet," we said.

The white-clad figures had seen us now and were waving their welcome. We answered in kind and held aloft our string of beauties. Fishermen never lie, and there was no need to begin. The fish just told their own tale.

For three days we were complimented and our advice was sought by every newcomer. Then one evening a visitor arrived. He was usually a visitor arrived. He was usually a visitor arrived. He was usually a visitor arrived.

"You remember our giving you those fish?" quoth he. "My boy has lost a finger-ring, and we wonder whether by any chance it dropped into your boat when we were passing you over the fish."

"For goodness sake!" exclaimed two women's voices in unison, as two figures faded stealthily away.

Western Farmers Building Silos

Field of Sunflowers in Alberta

It is to be anticipated that before many years have elapsed almost every farm in the Canadian prairie provinces will have its silo. The growth of the dairy industry would naturally bring this condition about in course of time, but the movement is being expedited by the success of the sunflower. Small fields of from three to thirty acres have been planted in various parts of the three prairie provinces of Canada. The plants are proving more satisfactory than the farmers generally dared to hope, since each acre yields on an average from fifteen to thirty tons of ensilage.

Many farmers have erected silos on their farms during the summer to take care of this crop, but most of them have under-estimated their requirements and will have more crop than they can put in their silos. Sunflower silage is due for a more extensive trial this winter than it has had before. The results in previous years have been very satisfactory, but only comparatively few farmers have grown the crop for silage previous to this year. If in the more extensive use the crop proved to be as satisfactory as it has already proved in the few cases where it has been tried, it is safe to say that in a few years the farm without a silo will be an exception in Western Canada.

so successful that it is predicted that one hundred silos will be built in the district next year and more than a thousand acres of sunflowers planted. Similar plans are being made in other parts of Western Canada, and the already rapidly growing dairy industry promises to grow much faster with the general acceptance of the sunflower as a silage crop. Another evidence of the value of sunflowers as a forage crop will be the big sale in England of many of the larger livestock raisers are growing sunflowers and erecting silos for this purpose. This will be especially true, and the finishing areas of Canada, which, hitherto, have been somewhat neglected, compared with the large feeding areas throughout the country, and the livestock industry in the West will be placed on a sound basis.

TALES OF OUR OWN COUNTRY

SOME CHRONICLES OF THE DAYS OF THE WAR PARTY AND THE BUFFALO—STORIES TOLD AROUND THE FIRES OF THE HUNTING CAMPS OF BYONE DAYS

THE ESCAPE OF ERNEST CASHEL FROM THE GUARDROOM—HOW A CONDEMNED CRIMINAL NEARLY EVADED THE GALLOWS—ONE OF THE MOST DRAMATIC INCIDENTS IN THE HISTORY OF THE WEST.

During the winter of 1903 one of the most dramatic of the incidents with which the North West Mounted Police are associated occurred.

There was an old man who lived alone on his homestead in one of the districts to the north of Calgary. He was of a solitary disposition and did not make many friends. I began to be noticed amongst his neighbors that there had been no sign of life about his place for some time, but at first that did not occasion much comment. At last their curiosity was aroused and on a visit being paid to his shack there was no sign of recent human tenancy. Everything, however, had been left as if the old man had been going about his ordinary avocations and a search was instituted. After some time his body was found by the mounted police with bullets through it and there was no doubt he had been murdered.

A Bad Man

There was, at that time, a young American in the district named Ernest Cashel who had gained some notoriety owing to his criminal proclivities. He had recently been convicted on some criminal charge and had been sent down for a term of years to the Manitoba penitentiary at Stony Mountain. When he was sentenced quite a scene had been created by his mother, who had held the young man in her arms and they both had wept bitterly.

The police in the course of their investigations into the death of the old man discovered that he had befriended Cashel previous to his arrest and that the young criminal had lived with him prior to his death. They went at the investigation in their usual painstaking way and it was discovered that the bullets found in his body were of the same calibre as the revolver Cashel was known to possess. There was other circumstantial evidence that Cashel was brought from the penitentiary to stand his trial for wilful murder. He was tried at Calgary and his guilt being proven beyond doubt he was sentenced by Chief Justice Sifton to suffer the extreme penalty of the law.

Condemned to Death

Old times, familiar with the city of Calgary, will remember that the police barracks stood on a sort of isthmus formed by the sweep of the Bow River near what was then the eastern limit of the city. The enclosure was a spacious one, covering several acres and the guardroom where prisoners were kept was in the remotest corner of it, close to one of the gates.

During his occupancy of the condemned cell in the guardroom Cashel was a model prisoner. He did not seem to show any particular contrition for his crime, and appeared rather indifferent to his impending fate. There were always a number of the force on duty in the guardroom—a non-commissioned officer and two constables. Cashel, although kept under close supervision was allowed the usual privileges accorded to those under sentence of death. He was visited from time to time by his brother who was allowed to talk to him through the bars of his prison.

One cold and stormy winter evening the guards were making preparations to be relieved. A blizzard was sweeping over the prairie and enveloping the whole country. During the course of the afternoon Cashel's brother had visited him, and the two had engaged in long and earnest conversation. The mounted policeman with unaccustomed delicacy had closed their ears as much as possible to the conversation.

The man's time was approaching, the work had already begun on the scaffold for his execution, and his hangman was on his way to Calgary to perform his grisly office.

A Daring Escape

There was a little bustle in the guardroom; in twenty minutes there would be a change of guards and the men on duty were preparing for their relief from their somewhat irksome task. It was part of their duties to search the prisoner and his cell prior to turning him over to the new guard. The corporal in charge unlocked the door of the cell and ordered the prisoner to come out so that the enclosure might be searched. Cashel's legs were manacled, but as he walked out of the cell he suddenly raised his hands and sharply ordered the constables to throw their arms above their heads, at the same time covering them with two revolvers. He was perfectly cool but deadly. He said, 'Boys, I don't want to kill any of you, but the law cannot be any more to me now, and I will shoot the first man like a dog who makes a move.'

To do anything would have been to court certain death and there was nothing for the policeman to do, but to comply with the desperado's orders. He ordered them into the cell he had just vacated, locked them in, and finding the key to his leg irons removed them and disappeared into the storm.

A Futile Chase

When the relieving guard arrived a quarter of an hour afterwards there was consternation in the barracks. Colonel Saunders, the officer in command of the post was at once notified and the hue and cry was raised. Darkness, however, had already fallen and the driving snow obliterated all tracks. All night long the search was carried on, but the fugitive seemed to have disappeared from off the face of the earth. The next day the search was resumed, but without avail. Cashel's brother was found loitering near the barracks the evening of the escape and was promptly taken into custody, but he either could not or would not give any information. A few days afterwards the authorities received a letter from Cashel written on the stationery of a Calgary hotel which purported to exonerate his brother from complicity in his escape. His counsel, F. J. Nolan, who at the time, was in Ottawa endeavoring to arrange for commutation of the death sentence was informed by wire, and a cordon of police was thrown around the city in the hope that the fugitive was still within its precincts.

Closes

Day after day and week after week the search pressed and still there was no trace of Cashel. The hangman remained in Calgary and the gallows was completed, but the victim was missing. There had been an unusually severe spell of wintry weather, but at length the Chinook came sweeping through the pass of the Rockies; the snow began to disappear and the ranchmen began to move about the country. Then reports came from various points that the fugitive had been seen. The police followed up each clue, but no sooner had they investigated one than Caschel was reported in another place some distance away.

Garret Wolseley Biggs

At length they got on a westerly trail that led to a deserted ranch house some distance from the city of Calgary. There were marks of recent footsteps around the building, but no other sign of tenancy. The living quarters of the house were carefully searched and then John Garret Wolseley Biggs, a Calgary hotelier, mounted his car, pulled, hearing a noise in the cellar, raised the trap door and heard a faint rustle of his hand, placed boldly into the gloom. The cellar was cribbed with boards, but the earth in some places had fallen down, behind them leaving dark nooks. Sure that he was close on the desperado, Biggs went on, feeling the boards and he did so two flashes of flame illumined the darkness and he saw quite distinctly Caschel crouching in a dark corner shooting at him at point blank range. Had it not been for the presence of mind Biggs would have been as good as a dead man, but he hurried his feet and this disconcerted his aim. Knowing that the fugitive could not escape he hurried up the steps and clamped down the trap door.

Smoked Out

A consultation was held and Caschel was summoned to surrender. He replied defiantly that he would never be taken alive. It was decided to smoke him out. A fire was kindled in a stove by the back of the building and a match applied to it. All night long the search was carried on, but the fugitive seemed to have disappeared from off the face of the earth. The next day the search was resumed, but without avail. Cashel's brother was found loitering near the barracks the evening of the escape and was promptly taken

Despite the fact that this man was a hardened criminal, there was a certain amount of rude loyalty about him. There is little doubt that during the many weeks he was at large he could have escaped from the country, but he was under the impression that if he were not caught his brother, who had undoubtedly provided him with the revolvers, might be hanged in his place, and he was prepared to give himself up rather than that should happen.

Previous to his execution, he made a confession of his misdeeds to the Rev. Mr. Kirby, a Methodist minister of Calgary, who preached a most lurid sermon the following Sunday on the result of evil counsels.

Biggs received a promotion as a result of his share in the affair.

.. of a War Wife ..

A TALE OF EVERYDAY PEOPLE AND THEIR HUMAN EXPERIENCES
SOME OF THE SORROWS WHICH THE WAR IMPOSED ON A WAITING WOMAN

A year has passed away since Albert died. Philip and I are still living with Aunt Isabel on the old Maine farm, and even now I am bewildered with the beauty of this romantic spot. Not very far away the sea rolls up on a perfect sandy beach, and in the distance are the most beautiful hills and soft green meadows imaginable only in stories of romance. And Aunt Isabel fits in so well with it all. I could not imagine her living anywhere else. She is gentle and feminine and yet behind, these clear, kindly eyes there reigns a keen brain, an indomitable will and a humorous understanding of humanity and its proneness to err. She manages the farm herself and her mind is really wonderful in its grasp of business detail, and then in the evening when we talk of books and things she amazes me by her love of the aesthetic and her good taste. I should not call her "intellectual," but she is marvelously intelligent and charmingly lovable, a combination which I do not think often occurs. And then she does not "pry." She has never asked me a single question as to my private affairs, leaving me to tell her what I cared to and what I did always sympathetically interested and sweet. This year has been such a sad, both of mind and body, but I feel that as soon as I shall be moving on. Philip is developing into such a sturdy boy. The broad outdoors and the beauty around him has been so good for him. They tell me that Dick is doing wonderfully well in his profession. I have not heard from him, and it has been better so. I have needed this year of reflection; perhaps he has been given a new viewpoint. The months which have passed. Maybe so.

I was sitting in the orchard this morning, leaning against a big apple tree, reading "Philip was romping about with the dog and emitting shrieks of laughter at intervals. I laid my book down on the grass and was watching him dreamily, just enjoying the sunshine, sometimes thinking of mother and of all that may happen in a few short years, when I had that sense of some other presence near me. I turned and jumped to my feet.

Now dear old diary I shall say good-bye to you. It is a very fragmentary and sorry little life I have had to tell, but it has reached its limit. I shall commence the story of my new life in another book and I pray and believe that it will be a happier one.

THE RED CROSS Appeals to You For Help to combat world threatening disease and to save the children in war stricken Europe

Herbert Hoover says: "Our problem over the forthcoming winter appears to be the care of about 5,600,000 of 4,000,000 children. These children are the obligation of every man, woman and child in the Western Hemisphere, for we have suffered less, but beyond this they are a charge on the heart of the whole world."

Help in this humane duty by bringing or sending your subscription to your nearest local branch or to Headquarters, Alberta Division, Canadian Red Cross Society, O'Fallon Block, Calgary, on Armistice Day, or week following.
